State Auditor, Tom Wagner says, the investigation revealed a lack of management. "If we put things under an umbrella concerning this special investigation we're left with management issues or I should a lack of management. Wagner says, procedures and practices were not carried out properly by the Red Clay Consolidated School District. Wagner says, the district needs to know the difference between minor cap money and major cap money. "Minor cap money is used to renovate capital projects, but in this case, it was used as major cap money, which is supposed to be allocated for buying of land and buildings. We know that between 600,000 and 800,000 thousand dollars of minor cap money was used for land and property purchases." Wagner adds, service contracts were not properly put out to bid with formal bid proposals. Wagner began the investigation after hearing a series of complaints on his office hotline. Wagner is recommends that officials in the Red Clay Consolidated School District improve its management oversight.
